

Home : Contact Us : Support This Site : Search : Purchase Problems? :

MAIN MENU

- Home
- About David Wilcock
- What is Ascension?
- Our Objectives
- Convergence: The Movie
- Read Free Books Here
- Discussions
- Text Too Small?
- Links
- Privacy Policy
- Search
- Contact Us
- David's Blog

ONLINE STORE

- Welcome
- CDs and DVDs
- Books
- Online Audio Readings
- Original Music
- Email Notifications - FREE
- Donations
- Purchase Problems?
- Pre-Register for 2012 Book
- The Science of Peace Series
- Your Account
- View Basket
- Checkout

MP3 DOWNLOADS

- What Will You Hear?
- Get Your Subscription Here!
- Purchase Problems?
- Access Subscription Content

QUOTE:

"I have been perusing your website... lots of information! The technical aspects of it are mind-boggling, to say the least."

-Harvey M. Williams

Love, Betrayal and Climate Change

Monday, March 5, 2007 - www.divinecosmos.com

Prepare to be under-whelmed. This is going to be a crappy, slap-dash, relatively graphics-free update - but things are moving so fast in the world that I feel I need to put the time in and keep doing this.

There are HUGE developments happening so suddenly now that it requires a prodigious effort to keep you informed...

I've been writing so frequently this past two weeks that I'm literally getting mild beginnings of carpal tunnel syndrome in my right wrist, which is mostly from all the mouse work associated with getting these articles online.

Yesterday I just had to completely take a break after about 3PM and spend the rest of the day doing something that did not involve sitting and working at a computer - so I read a book and enjoyed the sitting room in my new place. Now here we are once again!

Also, as of yesterday, I started using my mouse on the left rather than the right, based on a suggestion - and I found it not to be a serious adjustment, though it does slow me down by about 50 percent. My guidance is clearly telling me to "keep going" with the writing projects and make whatever arrangements I can with myself to keep from it damaging me. This morning's dream literally told me it is imperative that I keep working on the current article NOW, and get it done as soon as I can. Since I'm not done yet, if you want to hear from me right now, this is the lame rant you'll have to settle for... :)

PLAGIARIZED ARTICLE GOES VIRAL!

What I'm working on now will be a substantial update to the "interplanetary climate change" argument I've been making since I first found out about it in December 2000. I got all excited and printed Dr. Aleskey Dmitriev's original paper, but I didn't have time to read it until I was very high, up in the clouds, (not on dope, ya dope) in an airplane between Virginia Beach and New York. It was quite the setting to learn information that would change my life forever, and become the single most important "smoking gun" showing that things really are changing as we head into 2012.

I initially released the new information in an article with Wynn Free for the Spirit of Ma'at online magazine, just days before 9/11. I had no idea that our family of 'Internet Channelers' would soon rip it off and create a whole industry out of it. This sorry state of affairs reached its fruition in the "Planet X" model, which forecasted we would all die on May 15, 2003 from a rogue planet causing a pole shift.

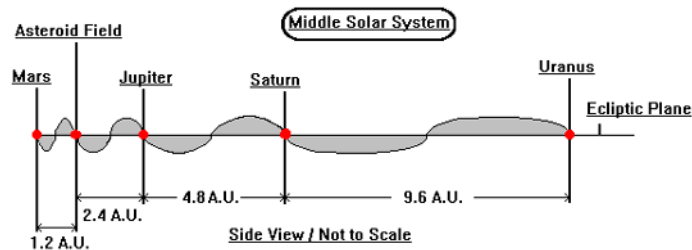

THE PROBLEMS WITH PLANET X

My original data was often quoted verbatim as "proof" for Planet X's impending attack - and sometimes people even USED this data in emails to me, saying that it was urgent I tell the world we're all about to die! I said, "Email me on May 16th and tell me what you think then," and they hissed, as they had it all worked out and KNEW they were right.

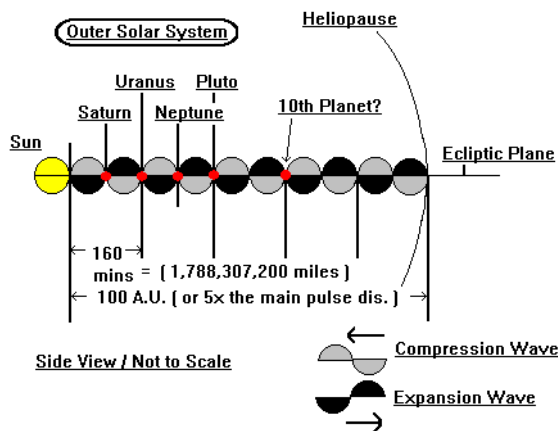

Here are the problems with Planet X. First of all, readers of CONVERGENCE volume III, Divine Cosmos, know that "Bode's Law" - i.e. the 'musical' relationships between the orbits of the inner planets - actually extends through the whole system thanks to the discoveries of "Stoneking Resonance". Each planet is in an exact position, determined by unseen waves that the Sun is giving off, which can be precisely measured and calculated by the rise and fall of the Sun's surface and an exact, harmonic number of solar diameters.

Each movement of the wave, i.e. 'wavelength,' is exactly one solar diameter, and these waves build up and harmonize, forming stronger and stronger wave-fronts at certain locations, which is where the planets end up orbiting. Any large planet would have been captured by these waves and thrown into orbit long before it could have ever gotten to be a large planet in the first place, and these same waves would REPEL such a huge object if it DID come near us.

There are certain unseen 'bands' created by these harmonic waves that we haven't fully measured or understood yet, but do exist, and they have a very strong braking effect on any large mass. We're only just now seeing some of their effects in the slow-downs observed with the Pioneer probes as they move toward the outer edges of the solar system.

One of our most unfortunate mistakes in the scientific mainstream is thinking that gravity is only a one-way force, moving from the outside of a gravitating mass towards the center. In fact, this flow is bi-directional. You could call the opposing force "levity," as I and others have done (noting that this word also means "funny and uplifting"), and then you have the missing piece to why anti-gravity technology is NOT an impossibility. This is another topic for future updates. If gravity were the only force that was working, you would be instantaneously crushed to a flat puddle where you sit. There is a tug-of-war going on between gravity and levity, and gravity only just BARELY is winning out.

Here's the second major problem with Planet X. No one stopped and thought about the fact that the Sun contains 99.86 percent of the mass in the solar system. All these models you see where the Sun is just a little bigger than the planets might look great, but they are totally wrong.

The sun is MASSIVELY larger than the planets. This 99.86 percent figure means that ALL planets, moons, asteroids, comets and dust - and there is a LOT of dust - only amounts to 0.14 percent of the total mass of the solar system. Even if Planet X was the size of Jupiter, its effect on the Solar System - particularly the Sun - would be no greater than throwing a tiny pebble of gravel at a parked car.

The idea that you could pull more energy out of the Sun by having a sand-grain-sized planet come near it is like thinking that a refrigerator magnet would be strong enough to pull a car in neutral from a dead stop. Obviously, as soon as your tow-truck started pulling against the refrigerator magnet, it would pull away from the car, and the car would continue to sit there.

Here's the third major problem with Planet X and other models like it. They all preach doom and fear. The original plagiarized article made it clear that I do not consider these changes to be dangerous. There are ample, healthy reasons for me to believe that we will be OK - and that will be the subject of ongoing updates here. For now you'll just have to panic at your own discretion... :)

FURTHER INSIGHTS INTO WHAT WENT WRONG

Ironically, when Wynn was interviewing me I was tired, didn't really feel like talking, and wasn't being completely exact about how I quoted the facts. At the time, I was planning on doing a far more formal treatment of the data in Chapter Eight of Divine Cosmos. I did manage to release that book for free online the following April, after suffering a laceration when I was working so hard one night in December 2001 that I fell with a drinking glass in my hand. [At the time of this writing we are in website transition and you can read the text, but the formatting is damaged on all the older content, so we ask your patience.]

Many of those pivotal words towards the end of Divine Cosmos were literally typed with all my fingers immobilized in a cast that went down to my forearm, holding a duct-taped toothbrush with my right thumb to pop at the keys individually on that side. I've saved it, as after I leave this world it will undoubtedly be worth at least a few thousand dollars on Ebay to some eccentric weirdo. Of course you, dear reader, would have no interest in such transient memorabilia, so don't take it personally.

I did also have to figure out how to wipe myself with the left hand in the bathroom, and do a passable lefty signature so I could continue to feed myself with my bank card. Eating with a fork on the left, and no ability to cut with a knife on the right, also proved interesting. In stores I had to elevate the hand above heart level, which meant that I was walking around like the Pope offering benediction - and that got some funny looks, as you can imagine.

As I've said before, that pivotal article was so heavily plagiarized that I really felt betrayed and disheartened - the weakness of the emotional body in action. I was already seeing the plague start to spread before I fell, and that was actually part of what made me work even harder to try to finish the book.

Granted, whomever first ripped it off DID shorten my verbiage down to an executive summary version - however they were unforgiving in stripping it of my essence as well. All of my unique insights into the meaning BEHIND the interplanetary phenomenon became those of "Russian Scientists," even though they were original thoughts, put together from my study of the Law of One material, my own intuitive connections and years of research, tying different pieces together.

The plagiarists also stripped all the reference links out of the original article, and at least two or three different people put their name on it as if they had written it - including two different popular "channelers" who you probably know by name if you've studied this field over the last several years. I actually threatened one of them with legal action, and this person's defense was saying that they had 'channeled' the words - i.e. the Hundredth Monkey effect - "So many people had read it that it was just out there in the aethers" - but as the conversation grew more animated, it turned out they had gotten an email that had the plagiarized article in it, without author credits, so they added a few things into it and called it their own. [This person, incidentally, was not in the Planet X crowd, just to clarify.]

You might be saying to yourself, "Get over it, David, lose the ego, buck it up and be a man. It's going to happen and there's nothing you can do about it." Bear in mind that even though there was a personal injury in seeing this get stolen and then become huge, my deepest regret was that millions of people were reading this article in its bastardized form, without ever having the opportunity to consult the much greater body of inspirational and scientific material that was behind it - on my own website. For FREE.

Plagiarists are cheating their readers from the opportunity to see more of that thinker's work when they do this. It is a real manifestation of the "ego" accusation that detractors invariably lob at someone in my position, and it is a shame. Some may not understand everything I've written, find it too technical and want to boil it down to the key points - but that doesn't mean your readers won't get it... and they do deserve the chance to try.

LEMME GIVE YA AN EXAMPLE...

Just so you can see I'm not blowing smoke, here's an example of someone posting about this viral Internet phenomenon I never got credit for, two years after it started. Many of the sentence fragments in the plagiarized version are just about word for word excerpts of what I said in that original interview, where I was dead tired, not particularly involved and just wanted to say what I needed to say and be done with it:

<http://tech.groups.yahoo.com/group/sacredlandscapist/message/4125>

> SOLAR SYSTEM CHANGES
>
> This the Russian perspective on earth changes. Hard facts > that are going unreported in America. The atmospheres of the > planets are changing. Dr. Dmitriev's work shows that the > planets themselves are changing. They are undergoing > changes in their atmospheres.

Greetings,

It would appear that Dr. Dmitriev's paper is getting a lot of play at various URLs. If you enter ... Natrium Dmitriev ... into Google you will get quite a few hits, including various translations of your posting. Many of the the URLs tend toward new-age or UFO-ish or 'conspiracy' sites, but a more complete text of Dr. Dmitriev's paper may be found with an Introduction and Conclusions at the URL:

<http://www.tmgnow.com/repository/global/planetophysical.html>

This is one example where the person dropped the actual link to the source paper I had been directed to in the first place, by Dr. Aleskey Dmitriev on the Millennium Group website. Lawrence Joseph actually found that link too, and wrote his book "Apocalypse 2012" after being inspired enough by the plagiarized article to travel to Russia and meet with Dr. Aleskey Dmitriev and others in person.

The problem is that there are so many variations of the "viral" version out there - 820 Google hits on "Natrium Dmitriev" - that it can be very difficult for someone to realize that it all started in my tiny little bedroom, overflowing with too much sunlight, on that sleepy pre-9/11 afternoon that would change history on the Net. Many "Highly Intelligent Skeptics" on the internet - really what I now am calling Fundamental Scientists or Scientific Fundamentalists - have "debunked" the article and felt good about doing so, not realizing that there is very hard data behind it - which none of the viral versions show.

As one example, I found out through later research that the "compound called Natrium" was actually sodium, which is Na on the periodic table. Whoever translated it from Russian in the first place didn't realize this, so when I blurted out the words in my interview I had no idea that it had such a simple answer. I fixed it in the Divine Cosmos book and in all later versions.

Also, the idea of an increasing sodium gas atmosphere on the Moon is weak - it is probably little more than the result of the solar wind, and you can't definitively say that it has gone up very much in density. So naturally, the fundamental scientists attack that one bit and ignore all the rest.

Since early articles on my website are still format-damaged at this time, one place where you can read a copied-over version of the words I actually said, as Wynn Free wrote the article, is here:

<http://www.crawford2000.co.uk/wilcock.htm>

If you look closely you'll notice that at one point there is a [20] in the article next to a link to my website at the time. That is the only link that survived people's inevitable deletions of ALL the footnotes I had painstakingly put in at the time. Originally there were well over 20 of them and they were all active online. The "Russian Scientists" had not found most of these links - I did a lot of research to dredge them up. However, at that time I was still only seeking specific validation of the points Dmitriev had already raised in his initial paper, rather than really looking for new ones.

If you rip the links out, then skeptics can just say it is "fantasy" or "nonsense" or "ridiculous" or "I've never heard anything like that," and they expect people to believe them, as if they are a source of all knowledge. This is what makes them Fundamentalists in their own chosen "religion". One thing about science is you can never know it all. I am repeatedly amazed by how much MORE you can find if you keep looking, looking, looking. To say that you've "never heard of" something, and therefore it doesn't exist, merely proves how little you know.

Anyway, as you can probably tell I have issues about what happened here - MAJOR issues that I'm whining about now - but perhaps the free-will principle was in play and the original article, with all the links intact, would have infringed too much at the time. It seems odd and frustrating, but it is my understanding that the ETs now visiting us have strict rules about not offering too much "proof" about these things until we are ready for it. People need to have the opportunity to deny something is real, and go on with their lives, if that is their choice.

Richard Hoagland contacted me in 2004 and when I told him about this phenomenon he inspired me to do a massive new glut of research about it, only this time it would ALL be from NASA sources - nothing Russian that could be so easily attacked. I did a prodigious amount of research, wrote it all up, Richard wrote a new intro for Part 2, contributed some new data, did a full polish on my sentence structures throughout the paper to make it more appealing and hard-hitting, and we published it as the "Interplanetary Day After Tomorrow" series on his website:

http://www.enterprisemission.com/_articles/05-14-2004_Interplanetary_Part_1/Interplanetary_1.htm

Unfortunately, with people's tendency to strip things down, it's discussed as "Hoagland's article" on the internet most of the time, so the issues really did not end.

Nonetheless, in that case the article was complex enough, the data embedded enough within the article, that I am only aware of one blatant example where someone cherry-picked data out of it and worked it together with their own spin, including material they channeled. Otherwise, it has just sat there for the last three years doing nothing.

I wrote up an even MORE far-reaching version of this data for a Deepak Chopra conference I attended in Puerto Rico in 2004, called Alliance for a New Humanity. Former Vice President Al Gore had been the keynote speaker the year before, talking on global warming, so I thought this was the perfect place to get the word out. I printed 500 copies of the paper, and to my surprise, most attendees were totally uninterested in reading it. They saw the headline: "Interplanetary Climate Change: A Catalyst for World Peace?" and just walked away without even picking it up.

Deepak also had no interest in it even though he obviously knew about it - he was sitting right behind me for two hours in the hotel's business office, answering his email, while I was feverishly using their binding machine to make up enough copies for everyone. Only 20 or so ever actually left, and the rest made an unwieldy stack of paper in my laundry room when I got home, so I finally recycled the binding combs and the paper. People just didn't want to HEAR this stuff.

I was NOT about to release this article online, due to the plagiarism I'd experienced before - Once Bitten, Twice Shy - and in fact I'm only just now preparing to do so. You will be able to read this VERY fascinating paper some time this week, and I'll probably have it as a PDF file as well as an online resource. It could get ripped off again, but hopefully this time we're going to do things right.

Hoagland contacted me again recently and with National Geographic Magazine now coming out with a Russian scientist saying that the Sun may be responsible for "global warming" on Earth AND on Mars, even though Mars has no atmosphere and no SUVs, it seems that big changes are happening. Timing is everything, and now I've also put together really stunning graphics to help people find the article. Tell me if you like it... Richard helped by getting me to italicize "Interplanetary," make the font the same color as "Hottest Secret," and having the NASA logo be in red.

So this is what's been gobbling up my time, even after all the other work I've already been doing. It seems like all I've ever been doing is writing, and even as I complete this sentence I'm continuing the 'problem'!

A MIDWINTER WORKAHOLIC'S DREAM

Late last week I had an interesting dream I can tell you about. I was in a very busy restaurant kitchen, working as a dishwasher, and plates were literally stacked higher than the top of my head in some instances. I was working frantically, trying to get everything done, knowing that it was a gigantic task but I just had to do things one at a time.

Then, in the midst of all this, there were two yellow mop buckets on the floor, and I bumped into one of them. Soapy water sloshed on the floor. It seemed inevitable that I was going to slip and fall, and hurt myself.

Then, a woman who seemed to be a combination of my mother and a former romantic interest of a friend of mine came in. This seems to represent my Divine Feminine, my Higher Self, which I of course do have a relationship with. In the past, when I've gotten this busy, I've neglected many important things in my life and I end up getting hit hard - including actually falling for real, in the past, and injuring myself badly.

I was already sure I was so busy that the 'Divine Mother' would be furious at me - so I started the aggressions. "OK, take your best shot," I said. "I know I'm working too hard. I know I've probably made mistakes, left things a mess, and disasters will happen. Whatever you've got to say, just say it." I was expecting the worst.

To my amazement, she just reached out and embraced me, and I sobbed in her arms. Powerful feelings of unconditional love surged through my body and I awoke still in tears.

This goes the same for you. Right now you're under a lot of pressure, you're seeing through the lies in the government, you're realizing global warming is a threat, and you're probably making mistakes, hurting yourself and hurting others along the way. Just remember that there IS unconditional love in the Universe. You DO have a higher self. It IS watching over you now, insuring that you are OK. We will be OK as a planet.

All of this was predicted in advance so you could free yourself from the prison of fear. Are you brave enough to take that step?

I'm willing to do so by releasing some of my most precious material in the days ahead. Ultimately this Ascension is happening to all of us, and even if my content gets ripped off again, the underlying point will still be heard. There is protection in the copyright, from any large-scale abuse, and once the film comes out next year it will be obvious where all this came from, even though the film does not tackle climate change.

Thanks so much for your continued support. There's a big I-told-ya-so party after 2012 and you're invited - in your light-body form, of course.

It's a BYOLB affair.

[BTW, I'm turning 34 on Thursday... so this is a great time for me to be doing all these new initiatives! I do want to thank you for your financial support with my initiatives here. By ordering products like the audio archive and the MP3s, you're taking more of the pressure off so I can not be quite so stressed out, and get more in the flow - which ultimately produces better content. Last month I almost had enough income from the online store to pay my rent, which was a first! So I thank you! Within a week or less we're going to be announcing a major new product you can order, so stay tuned for that... this is arguably the best one yet and a lot of people are going to be thrilled by it - and it will very likely go "viral" as well!]

TO BE CONTINUED...

Next >

[\[Back \]](#)

This site is optimized for 1024 X 768 resolution

COPYRIGHT (C) DIVINE COSMOS